

IMPROVING SUPPLY CHAIN MANAGEMENT KNOWLEDGE

Melbourne, 1 September, 2006

Next week GRA Partner, Carter McNabb, will conduct a course on Forecasting and Inventory Management for the Asia Pacific Centre for Continuing and Professional Development (a division of the Asia Business Forum) in both Singapore and Bangkok.

As an active supporter and contributor of educational excellence, GRA recognises that addressing the training, mentoring and coaching needs of supply chain practitioners is paramount in maintaining international competitiveness, as well as supporting the next generation of supply chain leaders.

This course is part of GRA's Knowledge Development Services which includes:

Training & Education

GRA is actively involved with Monash University, running its graduate level course in Managing Supply Chain Inventory within the Logistics & Supply Chain Management Masters Program. GRA is also involved in Monash University's Executive Development Program, an annual event run in conjunction with Michigan State University.

Culture Change

Any significant changes in supply chain management within an organisation can only be achieved by addressing the cultural, process and technology issues simultaneously. GRA has a unique, proven methodology that provides for smooth, assisted transition to ensure change is successful and maintained.

Coaching & Mentoring

New processes often require new ways of thinking that can best be learnt through one-to-one contact in an operational environment. GRA works with clients' teams on site to assist them with making decisions and balancing trade-offs. GRA's unique approach to coaching and mentoring ensures successful culture change and rapid ROI realisation.

GRA works with blue chip organisations and maintains an active training and development program across the Australian Defence Forces.
